“This broad introduction to intercultural communication, uncommon for its inclusion of ethics, civic engagement, and global media, also integrates popular culture examples likely to appeal to students.”

Wendy Leeds-Hurwitz, Villanova University, USA

“Well written, lively, and practical, Intercultural Communication for Everyday Life is the first intercultural communication textbook to challenge students to think critically about civic and political engagement in intercultural contexts. Bravo!”

Robert Shuter, DePaul College of Communication, Marquette University, USA

“Baldwin, Means Coleman, González, and Shenoy-Packer have written an intercultural communication text that starts with a rich conceptualization of culture while, at the same time, focusing students on basic concepts, key terms, and frameworks in a rigorous but approachable style.”

Michael Hecht, The Pennsylvania State University, USA

Even if you never leave your own country, you cannot help but cross paths with people of different cultures in our connected and fast-paced world. Written for students studying intercultural communication for the first time, this textbook gives a thorough introduction to inter- and cross-cultural concepts with a focus on practical application and social action. The book brings together a group of authors from diverse backgrounds (rhetoric, media studies, organizational approaches, and interpersonal communication) to present a broad view of “communication” that incorporates scientific, humanistic, and critical theories.

The text highlights and critiques key theory and research in an accessible and engaging manner but is written with a complex version of culture in mind. It incorporates examples from around the world that represent a variety of differences, including age, sex, race, religion, and sexual orientation. Pedagogy is woven throughout the text with student-centered examples, applications, critical thinking questions, and a glossary of key terms, and it extends beyond the book with online resources for both students and instructors. The text not only helps students understand other cultures, but it also encourages them to be more aware of and civically engaged in their own culture with suggestions for individual intercultural effectiveness and giving back to the community in socially relevant ways.

Online resources for students and instructors can be found at www.wiley.com/go/baldwin.

John R. Baldwin is Professor of Communication at Illinois State University.
Robin R. Means Coleman is Associate Professor in the Departments of Communication Studies and Afroamerican and African Studies at the University of Michigan.
Alberto González is Professor of Communication at Bowling Green State University.
Suchitra Shenoy-Packer is Assistant Professor of Communication Studies at DePaul University.
Intercultural Communication for Everyday Life
Preface xi
Acknowledgements xv
About the website xvi
Walk through xvii

Part one  Foundations  1
1 A rationale for studying intercultural communication
   Why should we know about other cultures?  3
2 Action, ethics, and research
   How can I make a difference?  24
3 Origins
   Where does our “culture” come from?  47

Part two  Elements  69
4 Subjective culture
   What is the base upon which cultural communication is built?  71
5 Identity: Struggle, resistance, and solidarity
   How can I think about my identity and that of others?  91
6 Intolerance–acceptance–appreciation
   How can we make the world a more tolerant place?  114

Part three  Messages  135
7 Verbal communication
   How can I reduce cultural misunderstandings in my verbal communication?  137
8 Nonverbal communication
   Can I make nonverbal blunders and not even know it?  159
9 Rhetoric and culture
   How does my culture relate to persuasive writing and speaking?  180
10 Culture, communication, and media
    How do media shape our views of others?  203

Part four  Contexts  225
11 Global media, global cultures
    How do culture and globalization influence each other?  227
12 Adaptation and intercultural competence
    How can I be effective in a new culture?  249
13 Relationships and conflict
    How can I have better cross-cultural relationships?  269
14 The political context
    How can we use communication to shape politics and culture?  290
15 Intercultural communication in international organizational contexts
    How does culture shape business, and how is business culture changing?  306

Conclusion  329
Glossary  331
Index  343
Contents

Preface xi
Acknowledgements xv
About the website xvi
Walk through xvii

Part one Foundations 1

1 A rationale for studying intercultural communication: Why should we know about other cultures? 3
   Building a rationale: Why do we need to know about intercultural communication? 5
      The personal growth motive 5
      The social responsibility motive 6
      The economic motive 8
      The cross-cultural travel motive 10
      The media motive 13
      Challenges of studying intercultural communication 15
   The history and focus of intercultural communication: Where did we come from? 16
      Summary 19
      Key terms 19
      Discussion questions 20
      Action points 20
      For more information 20

2 Action, ethics, and research: How can I make a difference? 24
   Muslim veils in French schools: How can we determine right from wrong in intercultural situations? 26
      Ethics and morality 27
      Determining a universal ethical stance 28
      Ethical relativism 29
   “Not in our town:” What is the role of intercultural communication in civic engagement? 30
      Political and civic engagement 31
      Defending civic and political engagement among college students 32
      Doing civic engagement 34
   How can we do responsible cultural research? 35
      Assumptions that guide cultural research 36
      Approaches to studying culture and communication 36
      Differences of focus in culture-and-communication studies 41
      Summary 42
      Key terms 43
      Discussion questions 43
      Action points 44
      For more information 44

3 Origins: Where does our “culture” come from? 47
   The relationship between communication and culture: How do they inform each other? 49
      Defining communication 49
      The relationship between communication and culture 51
   Defining culture: How can we define culture—and what are the implications of our definition? 52
   Aspects and elements of culture: What is culture like? 55
      Aspects of culture 55
      Characteristics of culture 56
A model of interaction: How can we best understand intercultural and intergroup communication? 61

Summary 63
Key terms 64
Discussion questions 64
Action points 65
For more information 65

Part two Elements 69

4 Subjective culture: What is the base upon which cultural communication is built? 71

Basic building blocks of culture: What are the most important things to know? 72

Cultural values: What are some useful frameworks for understanding culture? 75
  High- and low-context cultures 76
  Hofstede’s cultural dimensions 77
  Culture-specific (emic) approaches 81

World view: What are the beliefs at the center of our “world”? 84

Summary 87
Key terms 87
Discussion questions 88
Action points 88
For more information 89

5 Identity: Struggle, resistance, and solidarity: How can I think about my identity and that of others? 91

An introduction to identity: Who am I, really? 92

Identity and communication: How do we communicate our identities? 95
  Social identity theory and stages of identity development 95
  Identity is created through communication 95
  You are what you eat: Food as an example of identity 96

Identity and politics: How can our identities be political? 97
  Identity politics 98
  Punk rock and identity politics: A case study in brief 98
  Ideology, the KKK, and subtle White power 100
  Hegemony: National-regional and sexual orientation power plays 102

Identity in intercultural communication: What are some problematic ways to think about the identities of other groups? 103
  Orientalism 103
  The symbolic annihilation of race 105

Identity, solidarity, and civic action: Can I make a difference? 108

Summary 109
Key terms 110
Discussion questions 110
Action points 111
For more information 111

6 Intolerance—acceptance—appreciation: How can we make the world a more tolerant place? 114

Framing the problem: Where can we recognize intolerance? 116
  Terms: What are some different types of intolerance? 116
  Debates: Where does racism lie, and who can be racist? 123

Looking to a better future: What are some causes of and solutions for intolerance? 126
  Understanding the problem: Possible causes of intolerance 126
  Addressing the problem: Possible solutions to intolerance 128

Summary 130
Key terms 131
Discussion questions 132
Action points 132
For more information 132
Part three  Messages  135

7  Verbal communication: How can I reduce cultural misunderstandings in my verbal communication?  137

Systems of language and culture: Why is talking across cultures so difficult?  138
  Systems of meaning  139
  Speech acts and cultural communication  141
  Getting things done with language  141
  Explaining the details: Seeking ways to explain differences across cultures  143

Discursive elements of cultures: What happens when we join the elements of language?  147
  Cultural myth  147
  Conversational episodes  148
  Social dramas  149
  Cultural metaphor  150

Theories of conversation and culture: What happens when we actually talk to each other?  151
  Communication accommodation theory  152
  Communication and sites of dominance  153

Summary  154
Key terms  154
Discussion questions  155
Action points  155
For more information  156

8  Nonverbal communication: Can I make nonverbal blunders and not even know it?  159

Forms and functions: How should we act nonverbally when in another culture?  161
  Channels (forms) of nonverbal communication  162
  Functions of nonverbal communication and relations to verbal communication  164

Issues in nonverbal communication: How can I compare several cultures at the same time?  166
  Issue number 1: I can understand your facial expression—but does it mean what I think it means?  166

Issue number 2: Why are you standing so close to me? Space and other aspects of contact  167
Issue number 3: Does anybody really know what time it is?  169
Issue number 4: Why are you being so quiet? Cultural understandings of silence  170

Nonverbal expectancy violations: What does your nonverbal behavior mean?  171
  Culture and the expectancy violations model  172
  Culture and meaning: Semiotics  173

Summary  175
Key terms  176
Discussion questions  176
Action points  177
For more information  177

9  Rhetoric and culture: How does my culture relate to persuasive writing and speaking?  180

Rhetorical communication: How does culture inform persuasion?  181
  Rhetorical traditions: How do people in different cultures try to persuade?  182
  African American tradition: Rooted in resistance  184
  Chinese tradition: Rooted in social reflection  185
  Latino/a tradition: Rooted in revolution  187
  Native American tradition: Rooted in nature  189
  Western tradition: Rooted in argument  191

Vernacular rhetoric: How does everyday communication seek to persuade?  193
  Vernacular rhetoric in Africa  193
  Vernacular rhetoric in South Toledo, Ohio  195

Intercultural rhetoric: What are the implications for civic engagement?  197

Summary  199
Key terms  199
Discussion questions  200
Action points  200
For more information  200
10 Culture, communication, and media: How do media shape our views of others? 203

Effects and rituals: What role do media play in our lives? 204
Lasswell’s model of (mediated) communication 204
The transmission view versus the ritual view 205
The role of media in intercultural communication 206

Democratic discourse and diversity: What issues do media present to me as a citizen? 207

Media and cultural identities: Who are “we” now? 210
Digital media and social movements 210
Gender media frames: The social acceptability of showing breasts 212
Representational absences as an impediment to intercultural communication 217

Beyond traditional media: How do new media and culture shape each other? 218

Summary 220
Key terms 221
Discussion questions 221
Action points 221
For more information 222

Part four Contexts 225

11 Global media, global cultures: How do culture and globalization influence each other? 227

Culture on the global media stage: How does the global flow of information impact culture? 230
The global media experience 232
Satellite television: The progenitor of global media 234
Instantaneous cultural exchange: When time becomes timeless 236
The inequality of global media flow 237

Summary 238
Key terms 238
Discussion questions 238
Action points 238
For more information 239

12 Adaptation and intercultural competence: How can I be effective in a new culture? 249

Cross-cultural adaptation: How can I better adjust to a new culture? 250
Adjustment and culture shock: Defining the terms 251
Models of cultural adjustment 251

Rethinking acculturation: What happens when cultural groups live side by side? 256

Coming home: Will it be as easy as it sounds? 258
The process and nature of return cultural adjustment 258
Making the going and coming home easier 261

Intercultural communication competence: How can I get the job done… and still be liked? 262
Understanding intercultural competence 262
Beyond the multicultural person: Intergroup effectiveness 264

Summary 265
Key terms 265
Discussion questions 266
Action points 266
For more information 267

13 Relationships and conflict: How can I have better cross-cultural relationships? 269

Culture and communication in relationship: How do intercultural relationships grow and thrive? 271
14 The political context: How can we use communication to shape politics and culture? 290

Politics, culture, and communication: How do politics relate to culture? 292

Making change happen: What are some examples of successful social movements? 294
  The Green Belt Movement 294
  The immigrant rights movement 296

Intercultural political leadership: What strategies can we use to bring about change? 298
  Majora Carter and the Bronx River Alliance 298
  Servant leadership and TOMS shoes 300

Summary 302
Key terms 303
Discussion questions 303
Action points 303
For more information 304

15 Intercultural communication in international organizational contexts: How does culture shape business, and how is business culture changing? 306

A new contract: How are technology and information changing the culture of work and workplaces? 308
  New workers, new contracts 308
  Globalization and corporate and local cultures 309

Cultural variability: How does culture shape the organization? 312
  Trompenaars and Hampden-Turner’s cultural orientations 312
  Orientation toward time 316

A new world: What are the impact of globalization on business? 317
  Convergent and divergent hypotheses of business in a globalizing world 318
  Types of organization 319
  National/corporate cultures 321

Corporate responsibility: How can my company make a difference? 322
  Case studies of corporate social responsibility 322
  Intercultural organizing and communication for civic engagement 323

Summary 325
Key terms 325
Discussion questions 326
Action points 326
For more information 327

Conclusion 329
Glossary 331
Index 343
Global needs meet an engaged community

There are increased interconnections in the world at large—from international business and education opportunities to domestic and international crises. There is open conflict in Syria, Burma, Somalia, and Colombia, and dormant conflicts, quiet but never quite resolved, in Palestine, Cyprus, Northern Ireland, and many other places. Recent natural disasters of cataclysmic proportions have struck Indonesia (2004), Japan (2011), and Haiti (2012), each demanding forces of collaborating international and domestic workers. Governments work across cultures and across nations (concepts we will treat separately in this book) to fight against the international flow of the drug trade, human trafficking, and other issues. And, at the same time, we have seen great changes within and across societies, from the “Arab Spring” and the overthrow of several totalitarian governments to the renewed debate over same-sex marriage in the United States in 2013.

Grand-scale problems require complex solutions; and these solutions require the synergy of efforts of people with different cultural perspectives. But even if we do not see the connection of global issues to our own lives or ever travel abroad, culture touches our lives. We live in a multicultural, global economy, where, to survive, most large businesses employ, buy, and sell across cultural and national lines. Many of us, regardless of our country of residence, have doctors, teachers, bosses, students, or employees from “cultures” besides our own. With new and interactive media, we might play online games, chat, or develop friendships or romances with people in other lands without leaving our own borders. Besides this, we each live within and are influenced and sometimes constrained by our own cultures. The more we know about our own culture, the more effective we will be where we live, the more we can engage in issues and problems within our own community (which have cultural elements), and the more we will see the strengths and limits of our own culture. As we see these strengths and limits, we will have more likelihood of being able to make choices and change those cultures.

Whether we are discussing world-level crises or community issues, there is a bright spot as we talk about social issues, and that is the rise of involvement of citizens in the public sphere—at least in some ways. Russell Dalton (2009) reports statistics showing that while the younger generation (Gen Y) has a decreased sense of citizen “duty” in terms of things such as following the law without thought, or voting, they have an increased sense of citizen “engagement”, which includes seeking to understand opinions of others, “direct action, and elite-challenging activities” (p. 32). Engagement and duty are both impacted by things such as level of education, racial background, and religiosity. Increasingly, companies are encouraging their employees to participate in the community, and universities are promoting civic and political engagement.
There seems to be a fresh wind in the air as students in secondary schools, colleges, and universities seek to give back to the community. After a post-2005 decline, voluntarism increased to a high-point in 2011 (“Volunteering and Civic Life,” 2012; Volunteering/Community Service, 2010), and service learning opportunities at universities abound. Some have said that one of the characteristics of the up-and-coming generation is a sense of social responsibility, though one study suggests that the Millennial Generation “may not be the caring, socially conscious environmentalists some have portrayed them to be” (Chau, 2012). Instead, they might be focusing more on “money, image, and fame”. Statistics suggest that, at least in terms of volunteering, 16–18 year olds and those aged 25 and older historically volunteer more than the 18–25 set (Volunteering/Community Service, 2010). Students (especially in Western cultures like the United States, where “pragmatism” or “practicality” is a core value) have always wanted to study “what works”—what leads to better message production and consumption, better workplace practices, better relationships. But many students today often also seek ideas to help them engage better with the community. And knowledge of culture is central to such engagement.

Why another intercultural text? (Features of this book)

The need for solutions for community, as well as the growing interest in community engagement, is a driving force for the present book. We have three main goals in writing this text. First, we want to provide responsible knowledge of things cultural. Many introductory textbooks present simple explanations of things for the student new to cultural issues. We believe students are capable of deep thought, so, where possible, we introduce basic ideas, but then challenge students to critical thought about those ideas. Our second goal is for readers to be able to take something practical from the text for their own workplaces, relationships, and schooling, the traditional focus of intercultural studies. But the third goal is to bring an imagination of possibilities for community engagement—civic or political. We want to encourage readers, and ourselves as authors, to find ways to make the knowledge practical for making people’s lives better, to address social issues, to meet the personal needs of people in our lives and in our classrooms. With this in mind, this book has several distinctive features:

➔ The authors write for introductory readers, with clear definition of terms, but use original frameworks and introduce theories in a way that does not condescend to the reader.

➔ We treat culture complexly. While we sometimes discuss national cultures, through most of the book we see cultures as distinct from national boundaries. Some cultures cross national boundaries, and a single city might have people of many different cultures within it. There are regional, urban—rural, or other cultural differences within nations; even organizations have cultures.

➔ We construct a vision of culture that uses examples from around the world as much as possible, seeking to remove some of our own U.S.-centric bias as authors, and we use examples that relate to a variety of types of diversity, including age, sex, race, religion, and sexual orientation. While these, in and of themselves, do not constitute cultures, they often contain cultural elements, and there are cultural constructions of how a society treats different groups that deserve our attention as engaged citizens.

As authors with diverse backgrounds—rhetoric, media and African American studies, organizational communication, and intercultural/interpersonal communication—we (re)introduce notions to the study of intercultural communication not present in many books, including large sections on intercultural ethics and chapters on media, rhetoric, and globalization.

Throughout the book, we promote civic engagement with cues toward individual intercultural effectiveness and giving back to the community in socially relevant ways; we do this throughout the chapters and with discussion questions and engagement activities at the end of each chapter.

We weave pedagogy throughout the text with student-centered examples, thought (or “text”) boxes, applications, critical thinking questions, a glossary of key terms, and online resources for students and instructors. These online resources include sample syllabi, test questions, glossary terms, power points, and class exercise options.

Focus and direction of this book

With these goals in mind, our text begins with a discussion of the foundations of intercultural communication. In chapter 1, we introduce several reasons why it is important to study intercultural communication, with updated situations and examples of world and community diversity. In chapter 2, we introduce our central concepts of political and civic engagement and discuss the importance and nature of ethical intercultural communication and cultural research. We then turn to different ways to define culture (chapter 3).

The second portion of the book focuses on elements that inform the intercultural communication process, starting with the foundation upon which all communication rests—values, beliefs, and world view (chapter 4). We consider the view we have of ourselves as that relates to the groups to which we belong—identity (chapter 5)—and then look at our attitudes towards those of other identities (chapter 6).

In the third part of our book, we look at the exchange of messages through different channels. We begin with verbal communication—that is, face-to-face communication as it relates to the use of words in interaction (chapter 7). We next consider the various channels of face-to-face communication that do not use words—nonverbal communication (chapter 8). This includes discussion of things such as space, time, touch, eye contact, and gesture. We examine messages given by speakers or in texts to persuade—rhetoric (chapter 9). Finally, we look at aspects of mediated communication, in terms of how we mediate identity and culture (chapter 10).

Our final section contains issues and contexts of intercultural communication, starting with the impacts of globalization, especially on media (chapter 11), then moving to cross-cultural adaptation and intercultural communication competence (chapter 12), intercultural relations, conflict, and negotiation (chapter 13), political communication (chapter 14), and finally the organizational context (chapter 15).