FAMILY PROBLEMS
Stress, Risk, and Resilience

Edited by Joyce A. Arditti

WILEY Blackwell
Family Problems
Family Problems

Stress, Risk, and Resilience

Edited by

Joyce A. Arditti

WILEY Blackwell
Contents

Notes on Contributors vii
Acknowledgments xv

1 Introduction and Conceptual Overview 1
  Joyce A. Arditti

Part I Social Inequality and Marginalization 15

2 We’re Here, We’re Queer, and We Count 17
  Brad van Eeden-Moorefield and Kristen Benson

3 The Stigma of Families with Mental Illness 33
  Natalie R. Gela and Patrick W. Corrigan

4 Inside and Out: Family Life for Parents in Prison 50
  Ann Booker Loper, Mathilde Whalen, and Joanna Will

5 Social Disparities in Family Health 68
  Jinette Comeau and William R. Avison

6 Low-Income Fathers as Resilient Caregivers 83
  Kevin M. Roy, Rob Palkovitz, and Damian Waters

Part II Parenting and Caregiving in Diverse Contexts 99

7 “Do What You Gotta’ Do” 101
  Robin L. Jarrett, Ozge Sensoy Bahar, and Ezella McPherson

8 The Diverse Family Contexts of Youth in Foster Care 117
  Lenore M. McWey and Armeda Stevenson Wójciak

9 Grandparents Raising Grandchildren 133
  Megan L. Dolbin-MacNab and Bert Hayslip, Jr.

10 Caring for Older Adults 150
  Kathleen W. Piercy

11 Childhood Adultification and the Paradox of Parenting 167
  Linda M. Burton, Donna-Marie Winn, Howard Stevenson, and Marvin McKinney
Part III  Family Challenges Over the Life Course  183
12  Family Resilience to Promote Positive Child Development, Strong and Flexible Families, and Intergenerational Vitality  185
   Sharon Landesman Ramey, Robin Gaines Lanzi, and Craig T. Ramey
13  Challenges and Changes: Stress and Resilience Among Military Families  200
   Adrian Blow, Chris Marchiondo, and Lisa Gorman
14  Intimate Partner Violence  213
   Jennifer L. Hardesty and Kimberly A. Crossman
15  Abuse in Late Life  228
   Karen A. Roberto, Pamela B. Teaster, and Marya C. McPherson
16  Adolescent Development and Romantic Relationships  249
   Jennifer Kerpelman, Alyssa McElwain, and Hans Saint-Eloi Cadely

Part IV  Policy and Practice Responses to Family Problems  271
17  Strengthening Family Resilience  273
   Anne F. Farrell, Gary L. Bowen, and Samantha A. Goodrich
18  Family Policy through a Human Rights Lens  290
   Elaine A. Anderson and Bethany L. Letiecq
19  Multisystemic Therapy as a Strength-Based Model for Working with Multiproblem Families  305
   Stacy R. Ryan, Phillippe B. Cunningham, Patricia A. Brennan, and Sharon L. Foster
20  Risk and Resilience among Latino Immigrant Families  320
   José Rubén Parra-Cardona, Sara Lappan, Ana Rocío Escobar-Chew, and Michael Whitehead
21  Harm Reduction as a Model for Families Responding to Substance Abuse  337
   Patt Denning

Part V  Conclusion  355
22  Responding to Family Problems  357
   Joyce A. Arditti

Index  371
Elaine A. Anderson is Professor and Chair in the Department of Family Science, School of Public Health, at the University of Maryland. Her work focuses on the impact of policies on the health and well-being of families. She has used her research to inform state and federal legislators about how best to modify programmatic and policy initiatives on behalf of families. She is the former President of the National Council on Family Relations. She earned her Ph.D. from The Pennsylvania State University.

Joyce A. Arditti is Professor of Human Development at Virginia Tech. She received her doctorate in Family Studies from the University of North Carolina, Greensboro. Her research interests include family disruption, parent–child relationships in vulnerable families, and public policy. Her scholarship is recognized nationally and internationally and she has published numerous empirical and review articles in therapy, human services, family studies, and criminal justice journals. She is the author of the book Parental incarceration and the family: Psychological and social effects of imprisonment on children, parents, and care-givers published by New York University Press, for which she was the 2014 recipient of the Academy of Criminal Justice Sciences (ACJS) Outstanding Book Award, an honor awarded to a member of ACJS who has authored a book representing an extraordinary contribution in the field of criminal justice. Joyce recently served as the Editor in Chief of Family Relations: The Interdisciplinary Journal of Applied Family Studies. She is a Fellow of the National Council on Family Relations (NCFR), and Chair of the Research and Theory Section (NCFR). She is an Associate Editor for the Journal of Child and Family Studies, serves on various editorial boards, and is actively involved in research projects dealing with families involved in the criminal justice system.

William R. Avison is Professor of Sociology, Paediatrics, and Epidemiology and Biostatistics at the University of Western Ontario and Chair of the Division of Children’s Health and Therapeutics at the Children’s Health Research Institute. His research focuses on the effects of socio-economic disadvantage and social stressors on the health of families and children. He is the founding editor of Society and Mental Health: The Journal of the Sociology of Mental Health Section of the American Sociological Association. He received the Leonard I. Pearlin Award for Distinguished Contributions to the Sociological Study of Mental Health from the American Sociological Association in 2009. He earned his Ph.D. from the University of Alberta.

Ozge Sensoy Bahar is a recent doctoral graduate of University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, School of Social Work. Her research interests include inner-city communities, ethnic families, migration and women, the intersection of race/ethnicity, gender, and class, and resilience. Her dissertation explored how low-income Kurdish migrant/displaced mothers reconstructed their lives in an inner-city neighborhood of Istanbul, Turkey after migrating from the southeast of Turkey. Dr. Sensoy Bahar has co-authored multiple publications and conference presentations on the challenges encountered by inner-city residents both in Turkey and the United States as well as the resilience of female members of these communities in navigating multiple challenges created by structural factors.

Kristen Benson is Assistant Professor of Human Development and Family Science at North Dakota State University. A licensed Marriage and Family Therapist and Certified Family Life Educator, her research and clinical focus is on supporting lesbian, gay, bisexual, transgender, queer (LGBTQ) people and relationships. She is a clinical fellow of the American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy and a member of the National Council on Family Relations. She received her Ph.D. from Virginia Tech.

Adrian Blow is Associate Professor in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies at Michigan State University and Program Director of the couple and family therapy program. He is involved with several studies related to military deployment, including post-deployment adjustment of National Guard couples, evaluation of the Buddy-to-Buddy program (a peer-to-peer support program), resiliency processes in National Guard families, and other family-based interventions. He received his Ph.D. from Purdue University.

Gary L. Bowen is Kenan Distinguished Professor and serves as Lead Scientist in the Jordan Institute for Military Members, Veterans, and their Families, School of Social Work, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill. He also co-directs the School Success Profile (SSP) project and is a Fellow of the National Council on Family Relations (NCFR), the Society for Social Work and Research (SSWR), and Armed Forces & Society (AFS). He is past President of NCFR (2009–2011). He received his Ph.D. from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro.

Patricia A. Brennan is Professor of Psychology at Emory University. Her primary area of research is developmental psychopathology. She employs longitudinal and treatment research designs to assess biosocial risk factors for aggression, as well as the intergenerational transmission of depression and related disorders. Recently she has been examining the utility of biological factors as predictors of outcome in the context of Multisystemic Therapy. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Southern California.

Linda M. Burton is James B. Duke Professor of Sociology at Duke University. She directed the ethnographic component of Welfare, Children, and Families: A Three-City Study and is Principal Investigator of a multi-site team ethnographic study (Family Life Project) of poverty, family processes, and child development in six rural communities. Her research integrates ethnographic and demographic approaches and examines the roles that poverty and intergenerational family dynamics play in the intimate unions of low-income mothers and the accelerated life course transitions of children, adolescents, and adults in urban and rural families. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Southern California.

Hans Saint-Eloi Cadely is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies at Auburn University. His research focuses on adolescent identity development and changes in romantic relationships throughout the transitional period of adolescence to adulthood. Hans currently has four refereed journal publications that address adolescent romantic relationships, identity development, and intervention programs. He has also been involved in the implementation of relationship education programs across the state of Alabama such as Relationship Smarts.

Jinette Comeau is a doctoral candidate in Sociology at Western University and graduate research fellow at the Children’s Health Research Institute. Her dissertation examines the impact of socioeconomic disadvantage, neighborhood context, and family processes on children’s mental health over the life course. She is co-author of “The impact of mental illness on the family” in The handbook of the sociology of mental health, 2nd edn.

Patrick W. Corrigan is Distinguished Professor of Psychology at the Illinois Institute of Technology and a licensed clinical psychologist for more than 30 years. He is the Director of the National Consortium on Stigma and Empowerment (NCSE), a research center supported by NIMH. Central to NCSE is the Center on Adherence and Self-Determination (C ASD), supported as a developing center in services research by NIMH. Corrigan is a prolific researcher, having authored or edited 12 books and more than 300 papers. He received his Psy.D. from the Illinois School of Professional Psychology.

Kimberly A. Crossman is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Human and Community Development at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research focuses on women’s experiences of violent and nonviolent intimate partner abuse in the contexts of marriage, divorce or separation, and co-parenting with a current or former abusive partner. She is particularly interested in the roles of coercive control and the influence of gender in women’s experiences of abuse.

Phillippe B. Cunningham is Professor in the Department of Psychiatry and Behavioral Sciences, Family Services Research Center at the Medical University of South Carolina. He has had a longstanding commitment to addressing the psychosocial needs of children and adolescents, especially those who are disadvantaged and underserved. Much of this work has taken place within the context of federally funded studies aimed at further validating and disseminating Multisystemic Therapy. In 2000, Dr. Cunningham received the Theodore H. Blau Early Career Award from the American Psychological Association’s Society of Clinical Psychology. He received his Ph.D. from Virginia Tech.

Patt Denning is Director of Clinical Services and Training at the Harm Reduction Therapy Center (HRTC) and has been a primary developer of Harm Reduction Treatments (HTC). She is a Diplomate-Fellow in Psychopharmacology and a certified addiction specialist through the American Psychological Association’s College of Professional Psychology. She has worked in public and private treatment settings since 1975. She received her Ph.D. from the San Francisco School of Psychology.

Megan L. Dolbin-MacNab is Associate Professor of Human Development, Associate Professor of Health Sciences, and a faculty affiliate of the Center for Gerontology at Virginia Tech. She is also a licensed Marriage and Family Therapist and the Clinical Training Director at the Family Therapy Center of Virginia Tech. Her research on grandfamilies has explored grandchild experiences and well-being, parenting and family dynamics, and best practices for community-based interventions. She is the author of numerous journal articles and book chapters about grandfamilies, and has also developed variety of resources for practitioners working with custodial grandparents and their grandchildren. She received her Ph.D. from Purdue University.

Ana Rocio Escobar-Chew is an international Fulbright scholar and a postdoctoral fellow in the program of Couple and Family Therapy at Michigan State University. She is the project manager of various mix-methods studies focused on evidenced-based services for Latinos (including an NIMH-funded study on parenting and a program evaluation study for IPV Latina survivors). Her research experience includes community-based research, cultural adaptation of evidenced-based interventions, gender-based violence, and immigrant families. Her doctoral dissertation explored the life experiences and parenting needs of Guatemalan women exposed to violence. She is a member of the MSU Research Consortium on Gender-Based Violence at MSU. She earned her Ph.D. from Michigan State University.

Anne F. Farrell is Assistant Professor in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies at the University of Connecticut. She is a translational scholar whose work encompasses at-risk and underserved populations, including children with special health care needs (CSHCN) and their families. Recent projects and publications address family-centered practices, positive behavior interventions, cross-systems collaboration, family resilience, supportive housing in child welfare, and military families with CSHCN. She serves on the editorial boards of Infants and Young Children, Family Relations, and Early Childhood Research Quarterly. She received her Ph.D. from Hofstra University.

Sharon L. Foster is Distinguished Professor at the California School of Professional Psychology at Alliant International University in San Diego. She is

Natalie R. Gela is a doctoral candidate in Clinical Psychology at the Illinois Institute of Technology, Chicago, Illinois. Her research and clinical interests include working with individuals, couples and families coping with mental illness.

Samantha A. Goodrich is Senior Research and Evaluation Scientist in the Office of Health Systems Research and Innovation within the Lehigh Valley Health Network. Her research interests include evaluations of prevention and intervention programs for children and families. In particular, her focus is on the implementation of programs that aim to improve the health and well-being of families and communities, including home visiting, parent education, early education, early intervention, and wrap-around programs. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Connecticut Department of Human Development and Family Studies.

Lisa Gorman is Program Director for the Michigan Public Health Institute and a licensed Marriage and Family Therapist. She works collaboratively with families, public health, universities, policy makers, and other community partners on innovative solutions that will improve health outcomes and quality of life for families. Dr. Gorman has been engaged in program development, evaluation, and research activities on behalf of military families since 2005 and is co–principal investigator of Risk, Resiliency, and Coping in National Guard Families, a Department of Defense–funded study. She received her Ph.D. in Family and Child Ecology from Michigan State University.

Jennifer L. Hardesty is Associate Professor of Family Studies in the Department of Human and Community Development at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research focuses on mothers who separate from violent partners, with specific attention to the separation/divorce process, post-separation violence and coercive control, parenting with violent former partners, and the health and safety of mothers and children after separation. She received her Ph.D. in Human Development and Family Studies from the University of Missouri-Columbia and completed a postdoctoral training fellowship in violence research in the School of Nursing at Johns Hopkins University.

Bert Hayslip, Jr. is Regents Professor Emeritus at the University of North Texas. He is a Fellow of the American Psychological Association, the Gerontological Society of America, and the Association for Gerontology in Higher Education. An Associate Editor of Experimental Aging Research and of Developmental Psychology, his co-authored books include Emerging perspectives on resilience in adulthood and later life (Springer, 2012), Resilient grandparent caregivers: A strengths-based perspective (Routledge, 2012), Adult development and aging (Krieger, 2011), and Parenting the custodial grandchild (Springer, 2008). He is Co–principal Investigator on a NINR-funded project exploring interventions to improve the functioning of grandparent caregivers. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Akron.

Robin L. Jarrett is Professor of Family Studies in the Department of Human and Community Development, and Professor in the Department of African American Studies at the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign. Her research interests include positive child and adolescent development, African American family functioning and resilience, and building supportive inner-city communities. As an urban ethnographer, Dr. Jarrett uses an array of qualitative data collection strategies in her research, including participant observation, neighborhood observation, individual and group interviewing, photo-documentation, and GIS. She has published widely in journals that reflect her interest in child/youth development, families, and neighborhoods, including Journal of Children and Poverty, Journal of Family Issues, Journal of Family Psychology, Journal of Poverty, Journal of Research on Adolescence, and International Journal of the Constructed Environment. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Chicago, Department of Sociology.
Jennifer Kerpelman is Professor of Human Development and Family Studies and Associate Dean for Research and Graduate Studies in the College of Human Sciences at Auburn University. Her research focuses on the examination of adolescent development and adolescents’ relationships with parents and peers. She has over 50 refereed journal publications that address individual development, close relationship functioning, and adolescent outcomes such as educational goals, sexual health, relationship knowledge and quality, and identity development. She also has created resources designed to promote positive youth development in areas of self-development, civic engagement, parent-adolescent relationships, and adolescent peer and dating relationships. She received her Ph.D. from Auburn University.

Robin Gaines Lanzi is Associate Professor and Graduate Program Director of Health Behavior in the School of Public Health at the University of Alabama at Birmingham. She is a developmental psychologist with a maternal and child health background whose research centers on reducing maternal and child health disparities and promoting positive youth development. A central theme throughout her research is “putting research into practice” through multiple pathways, including a focus on community-based participatory research in the design, planning, implementation, and dissemination of findings. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Alabama at Birmingham.

Sara Lappan is a doctoral student in the Department of Human Development and Family Studies with a concentration in Couple and Family Therapy at Michigan State University. She is currently involved in program evaluation research. Sara is a student affiliate of the American Association of Marriage and Family Therapy. Her clinical experience includes providing family, couple, and individual therapy working in the Adolescent Partial Hospitalization Program at Borgess Medical Center, at Western Michigan University’s Center for Counseling and Psychological Services, Michigan State University’s Couple and Family Therapy Clinic, and Perspectives Therapy Services.

Bethany L. Letiecq is Associate Professor of Human Development and Family Science at George Mason University. She teaches courses on family relations and family law and social policy. Her community-based and action research focuses on the health and well-being of families marginalized by social, economic, and political forces. Most recently, she has worked in partnership with Mexican migrant families settling in new destinations to ameliorate poor mental health conditions among migrant families and promote migrant justice. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Maryland at College Park.

Ann Booker Loper is Professor at the University of Virginia’s Curry School of Education. Her research focuses on the mental health and adjustment of prisoners and their family members, with a particular emphasis upon the parent-child relationships in justice-involved families. Dr. Loper has collaborated with prison, jail, and community partners in the development of a parenting program for incarcerated mothers. She has consulted with local and state agencies concerning the rehabilitative needs of returning prisoners, particularly as related to family reunification. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Texas at Austin.

Chris Marchiondo is a doctoral student in Human Development and Family Studies, with a specialization in Couple and Family Therapy at Michigan State University. His research focuses on the risk and protective factors facing veterans and their families after combat deployments. Previously, Chris served as an active duty Army officer.

Alyssa McElwain is a doctoral candidate in Human Development and Family Studies at Auburn University. Her research focuses on interpersonal and individual factors associated with adolescent sexual development including romantic relationships, parent-adolescent relationships, and identity exploration. She has worked in outreach in the state of Alabama by assisting with the implementation of sexual health and relationship education programs, writing website content, and providing technical assistance and program evaluation. She has also coordinated undergraduate service learning courses that implement positive youth development and relationship education programs targeting adolescents in the local community.
Marvin McKinney is Research Fellow at the Frank Porter Graham Child Development Institute at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and Co-principal Investigator for Promoting Academic Success for Young Boys of Color. He is also a member of the Research, Policy, and Practice Alliance Supporting Excellence in Black Children and serves as senior consultant to University Outreach and Engagement at Michigan State University. He has over three decades of experience working as a strategist and an advocate for young children in urban communities. He received his Ph.D. from the University of Michigan.

Ezella McPherson has expertise in qualitative research, STEM education, mentoring, academic advising, K-20 retention, persistence, and graduation for underserved populations. Her dissertation centered on the persistence of African American women in STEM fields. It examined why some African American women stayed in or departed from STEM majors. Her current research projects focus on college student persistence and success for underrepresented populations in STEM fields at PWIs and HBCUs. Other research interests include: resilience, mentoring, health, neighborhoods, environmental studies, and urban studies. She recently received her Ph.D. in Educational Policy Studies from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign.

Marya C. McPherson is Executive Director at Mental Health America of New River Valley in Blacksburg, Virginia. She has over 20 years’ experience working with families, children, and older adults through educational and community-based programs. In recent years, Ms. McPherson has acquired additional credentials and expertise in adult development and aging, research, and grant-writing, with a primary focus on family violence prevention and mental health across the lifespan. Her current role involves advocacy, education, and program development for improved community response to mental health challenges. She received her Master’s degree from Virginia Tech.

Lenore M. McWey is Professor in the Marriage and Family Therapy Doctoral Program at Florida State University. Her research and clinical interests involve working with families at high risk for child maltreatment. She is particularly interested in systemic interventions aimed to improve outcomes of families involved with the child welfare system. She received her Ph.D. from Florida State University.

Rob Palkovitz is Professor of Human Development and Family Studies at the University of Delaware. His research interests are in fathering and intergenerational relationships and development, with a particular emphasis on the relationships between patterns of father involvement and developmental outcomes for men and their children. His teaching, research, and community service focus on applied systems perspectives for facilitating life opportunities for persons at risk. He received his Ph.D. from Rutgers University.

José Rubén Parra-Cardona is Associate Professor in the program of Couple and Family Therapy at Michigan State University (MSU), Department of Human Development and Family Studies. He is also Associate Director of the MSU Research Consortium on Gender-Based Violence. His NIMH-funded research is focused on the prevention of child abuse and neglect through the cultural adaptation of evidence-based parenting interventions for Latino immigrant populations. His violence research is focused on: (a) investigating the cultural relevance of services for Latina survivors and Latino men who abuse, and (b) understanding intervention processes associated with men’s elimination of abusive behaviors. He received his Ph.D. from Texas Tech University.

Kathleen W. Piercy is Professor in the Department of Family, Consumer, and Human Development at Utah State University. She teaches undergraduate and graduate student courses in family policy, and graduate courses in personal relationships and in qualitative methods. Dr. Piercy’s primary research focus is on the dynamics of family care of older adults. Her first book, Working with aging families: Therapeutic solutions for caregivers, spouses, and adult children, was published by W. W. Norton in 2010. She has authored or co-authored 40 refereed journal articles, mostly on aging topics, and three book chapters. She received her Ph.D. from Virginia Tech.
Craig T. Ramey is Distinguished Scholar of Human Development at the Virginia Tech Carilion Research Institute and Professor of Psychology at Virginia Tech. He is a lifespan developmental psychologist who has conducted randomized controlled studies of the impact of high-quality early childhood education on the cognitive, social, and educational outcomes for vulnerable children (including the Abecedarian Project, Project CARE, and the Infant Health and Development Program). These studies have affirmed that positive early childhood experiences exert a large effect on adolescent and adult outcomes, including health and educational attainment with benefits to the entire family. He received his Ph.D. from West Virginia University.

Sharon Landesman Ramey is Distinguished Scholar of Human Development at the Virginia Tech Carilion Research Institute and Professor of Psychology at Virginia Tech. She is a developmental scientist who has studied the changing American family. She has developed and tested interventions for children with developmental disabilities and with family risk conditions, often resulting in large and sustained benefits that exceed what had been predicted based on their biology and life circumstances. She also conducts research on stress and resilience effects across multiple generations. She received her Ph.D. from the University of Washington at Seattle.

Karen A. Roberto is Professor and Director of the Center for Gerontology and the Institute for Society, Culture and Environment at Virginia Tech. Her research focuses on health and social support in late life and includes studies of rural older women, family relationships and caregiving, and elder abuse. She is the author of over 180 scholarly publications and the editor/author of 11 books. Dr. Roberto is a Fellow of the Gerontological Society of America and the National Council on Family Relations. She is a recipient of the Gerontological Society of America Behavioral and Social Sciences Distinguished Mentorship Award. She received her Ph.D. from Texas Tech University.

Kevin M. Roy is Associate Professor in the Department of Family Science at the University of Maryland, College Park, School of Public Health. His research focuses on the life course of young men on the margins of families and the work force, as they transition into adulthood and fatherhood. He explores the intersection of policy systems, such as welfare reform, community-based parenting programs, and incarceration, with caregiving and providing roles in kin networks. He received his Ph.D. from Northwestern University.

Stacy R. Ryan is Assistant Professor in the Department of Psychiatry, Neurobehavioral Research Laboratory and Clinic at the University of Texas Health Science Center at San Antonio. Her primary research interests center on identifying factors that influence outcomes for treatment of youth substance use and related aggressive/delinquent behavior. She is particularly interested in using this information to understand the utility of current evidence-based programs for underserved families. She received her Ph.D. from Emory University.

Howard Stevenson is Constance E. Clayton Professor of Urban Education and Africana Studies at the University of Pennsylvania in the Applied Psychology and Human Development Division at the Graduate School of Education. His research interests include the development of racial socialization interventions to promote racial coping strategies that increase youth and family well-being. His latest book, Promoting racial literacy in schools: Differences that make a difference, focuses on how educators, community leaders, and parents can resolve face-to-face racially stressful encounters that undermine student achievement and health, racial profiling, and social conflicts within neighborhoods of color. He received his Ph.D. from the Fuller Graduate School of Psychology.

Pamela B. Teaster is Professor at the Center for Gerontology and Department of Human Development at Virginia Tech. She previously served as Director of the Geriatric Education Center and Chairperson of the Graduate Center for Gerontology/Department of Gerontology, Director of Doctoral Studies, and Associate Dean for Research for the College of Public Health at the University of Kentucky. Dr. Teaster is a member of the editorial