This NSPCC/Wiley series explores current issues relating to the prevention of child abuse and the protection of children. The series aims to publish titles that focus on professional practice and policy, and the practical application of research. The books are leading edge and innovative and reflect a multidisciplinary and inter-agency approach to the prevention of child abuse and the protection of children.

All books have a policy or practice orientation with referenced information from theory and research. The series is essential reading for all professionals and researchers concerned with the prevention of child abuse and the protection of children.

Les Back teaches sociology at Goldsmiths, University of London. His recent books include The Art of Listening (Berg, 2007) and Out of Whiteness: Color, Politics and Culture (University of Chicago Press, 2002). He writes regularly for non-academic audiences and is a contributor to Eurozine, openDemocracy, The Times Higher Educational Supplement and The Guardian.

Christine Barter is an NSPCC Senior Research Fellow at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol. Previously she was a Senior NSPCC Research Fellow with the University of Bedfordshire. She has published widely on a range of children’s welfare issues including children who run away, protecting young people from racism and racial abuse, boys’ use of advice and counselling services, institutional child abuse, and involving children and young people in social research. Currently her work focuses on the neglected area of young people’s experiences of partner exploitation and violence in their intimate relationships.

Jo Bell is a Lecturer in the Department of Social Sciences at the University of Hull. Her research interests are broadly around health, development and education in young people. She has extensive experience of research on sensitive issues with young people and families, and has researched and published work in the areas of adolescent development, domestic violence, young suicide, young parenthood and sexual health and behaviour in young people.

David Berridge is Professor of Child and Family Welfare and Head of the Centre for Family Policy and Child Welfare at the School for Policy Studies, University of Bristol. He has been a researcher for 25 years and is author/co-author of 12 books and numerous other chapters and articles. With Christine Barter, he has collaborated with the NSPCC for 15 years on projects concerning mainly adolescents and child protection issues. His latest co-authored book is Educating Difficult Adolescents: Effective Education for Children in Care or with Emotional and Behavioural Difficulties (Jessica Kingsley, 2008). David was awarded the OBE in January 2005 for services to children.

Jane Brown originally trained as an art therapist, specialising in child protection. She started life as a researcher in 1992, observing children giving evidence in courtroom situations. She has a longstanding interest in violent behaviour in childhood and adolescence and has published widely in the field. Her most recent publications include ‘School Violence’ as a Social Problem: Charting the Rise of the Problem and the Emerging Specialist Field (co-authored with P. Munn, Routledge, 2008) and “‘They are just like caged animals’: surveillance, security and school spaces” (Surveillance and Society, 2010). She has been based at the Faculty of Education, University of Edinburgh, for the past 8 years and is currently leading a review of violence in mainstream primary and secondary schools in the UK.

Helen Cowie is Research Professor and Director of the UK Observatory for the Promotion of Non-Violence at the University of Surrey in the Faculty of Health and Medical Sciences. She has published widely in the field of child development, specialising in bullying, violence in schools, mental health and young people, and peer support as an intervention to promote non-violence. Her textbook, Understanding Children’s Development (co-authored with P.K. Smith and M. Blades, and first published by Blackwell in 1988), is now into its 5th edition and has become one of the major undergraduate developmental psychology texts in the UK. Her most recent books (both co-authored with J. Dawn) are Managing Violence in Schools: A Whole-School Approach to Best Practice (Sage, 2007) and New Perspectives on Bullying, Open University Press, 2008). Major European projects include ‘Violence in schools training action (VISTA)’; ‘CyberTraining’ and the creation of an online education centre to address school violence.

Jane Ellis is currently an NSPCC Senior Research Officer. Previously she worked as a consultant on prevention work in schools for WOMANKIND Worldwide, the Scottish Government, Westminster Domestic Violence Forum and Birmingham Women’s Aid. Her PhD, undertaken at the University of Warwick, was a study of school-based work to prevent domestic violence where the role of young people as evaluators was explored. She has a background of working with children and young people in formal and non-formal educational settings, as both a teacher and community education worker. She has been a member of the DCSF Advisory Group on Violence Against Women and Girls.

Carlie Goldsmith is a Lecturer in Criminology at the University of Kingston. Her main criminological research interests have included community safety, neighbourhood policing and young people. As part of this work for her PhD thesis, she has been particularly interested in utilising ethnographic and qualitative research methods to explore the strategies adopted and developed by young people attempting to stay safe in their communities. Her core concern has been to examine the impact of contemporary criminal justice policies on young people’s experience of community. Articles from this work have already been published – for example, in ASBO Nation (Policy Press, 2008).

Simon Hackett is Professor and Head of the School of Applied Social Sciences at Durham University, UK. He has published widely in relation to sexual abuse and sexual aggression. With Professor Helen Masson, he is involved in a multi-site study of desistance, recidivism and life course trajectories of young people 10 years after the initial identification of their sexually abusive behaviours. Simon’s practice base with children and young people with harmful sexual behaviours extends back to the early 1990s and he was previously a programme director of G-MAP, a leading UK community-based specialist service.

Simon Hallsworth is Professor of Social Research in the Department of Applied Social Science at London Metropolitan University and Director of the University’s Centre for Social and Evaluation Research. He has advised a range of statutory agencies on issues relating to crime and community safety, and has written extensively concerning street-related violence and penal change and development. He is author of Street Crime (Willan, 2005) and co-editor of The New Punitiveness: Trends, Theories, Perspectives (Willan, 2005).

Veronica M. Herrera is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Criminal Justice at Indiana University. Her research focuses on examining the long-term effects of exposure to family violence on adolescent risk behaviour. Her work examines gender differences in pathways to delinquency, psychopathology stemming from histories of victimisation, predictors of dating violence, and influence of partner effects on young adult offending patterns. She is particularly interested in the ways in which girls’ routes to delinquency differ from boys’. She has published articles in The Journal of Youth and Adolescence, Violence and Victims, Child Abuse and Neglect and The Journal of Family Violence.

Andrew Kendrick gained his PhD in social anthropology from the London School of Economics in 1984. He was a Lecturer and Senior Lecturer in Social Work at Dundee University before he took up the post of Professor of Residential Child Care with the Scottish Institute for Residential Child Care at Strathclyde University. Andrew became Head of Department of the Glasgow School of Social Work in 2006. He has carried out a wide range of research related to child care and welfare, with a particular focus on residential child care. He recently edited the book Residential Child Care: Prospects and Challenges (Jessica Kingsley Publishers, 2007).

Paul B. Naylor is a Senior Research Fellow in the Institute for Health Services Effectiveness, Aston Business School, Aston University. Since taking up a research career 12 years ago, he has published, in total, more than 20 book chapters, web articles, and peer-reviewed journal articles. Most of this work has been on bullying among children and anti-bullying peer support systems in school, but also on workplace bullying and interpersonal racism.

Sharon L. Nichols is an Assistant Professor of Educational Psychology at the University of Texas at San Antonio. She is Chair of the Adolescence and Youth Development Special Interest Group of the American Educational Research Association, and co-author of two books: Collateral Damage: How High-Stakes Testing Corrupts America’s Schools (with D.C. Berliner, Harvard Education Press, 2007) and America's Teenagers – Myths and Realities: Media Images, Schooling and the Social Costs of Careless Indifference (with T.L. Good; Erlbaum, 2004). Her current work focuses on the impact of test-based accountability on adolescent motivation and development.

Laurie Petch works as a practitioner–researcher in the area of applied existential child psychology. He is currently practising as an educational/school psychologist in Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, where he also has a training role. Simultaneously, he is working to complete his PhD in SchHARR in the University of Sheffield, UK. He is a member of the British Psychological Society, the Canadian Psychological Association, the Society for Phenomenology and the Human Sciences, and the International Collaborative of Existential Counsellors and Psychotherapists. His research interests focus on renewing child and educational psychology practice through an approach underpinned by existential philosophy.

Emma Renold is a Reader in Childhood Studies at the School of Social Sciences, Cardiff University. She is the author of Girls, Boys and Junior Sexualities: Exploring Children's Gender and Sexual Relations in the Primary School (RoutledgeFalmer, 2005) and co-editor of the international journal Gender and Education. Working at the intersection of queer and feminist post-structuralist theory she has published widely on the gendering and sexualisation of children and childhood across diverse institutional sites and spaces. Her current research project, ‘Young people and place’ foregrounds locality, bodies and movement in a participative multi-modal ethnography of girls’ and boys’ negotiations of urban and semi-rural public space.

Jessica Ringrose is a Senior Lecturer at the London Institute of Education. Her current research is on young people’s sexual identities and hierarchies on social networking sites, available in New Femininities: Postfeminism, Neoliberalism and Identity (Palgrave, 2010). Her research on intersectional femininities and competitive, heterosexualised aggression and bullying appears in Feminism and Psychology, Feminist Theory, Girlhood Studies and The British Journal of Sociology of Education. Her writing on postfeminism, neoliberalism, class and feminine ‘success’ can be found in Gender and Education and Feminist Media Studies. Jessica is currently writing a book: Postfeminist Education? Girls and the Sexual Politics of Schooling (Routledge).

Ian Rivers is Professor of Education at Brunel University, West London. He is a chartered health psychologist and has held Chairs in Applied and Community Psychology at York St John College and Queen Margaret University. He is the recipient of the British Psychological Society’s 2001 Award for Promoting Equality of Opportunity through his work as a psychologist in the UK, and in 2007 was elected a Fellow of the American Psychological Association for his contribution to lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender (LGBT) psychology internationally.
LIST OF CONTRIBUTORS

Peter Squires is a Professor of Criminology and Public Policy at the University of Brighton. His work has included the fields of policing, youth crime and anti-social behaviour, and firearm-involved crime. Recent projects on young people, gangs and the use of weapons, in conjunction with the Centre for Crime and Justice Studies at King’s College, London, have been the basis of his recent work exploring the street life of young people, ‘gangs’ and what has been referred to as the ‘weaponisation’ of youth violence. His book Shooting to Kill?: Policing, Firearms and Armed Response was published by Wiley-Blackwell in early 2010.

Nicky Stanley is Professor of Social Work at the University of Central Lancashire. She researches in the fields of domestic violence, parental mental health and child welfare, young people’s mental health and inter-agency work. Commissioned research includes studies of domestic violence initiatives, social work practices, the mental health of young people, teenage pregnancy and student suicide. Her study of service responses to children and families experiencing domestic violence has been published by NSPCC (2010). She is co-editor of Child Abuse Review and has published books on domestic violence and child protection, mothers’ mental health needs and inquiries in health and social care.

Jeff Stuewig is a Research Assistant Professor in the Psychology Department at George Mason University in Fairfax, Virginia. His research interests include developmental psychopathology, aggression, shame, guilt and risky behaviour over the life course. Recently, he has been involved in a study examining the moral emotions and their relationship to future recidivism and rehabilitation among a sample of jail inmates. He has published articles in Addictive Behaviors, Child Maltreatment, Development and Psychopathology, The Journal of Interpersonal Violence, Criminal Behaviour and Mental Health, and The Journal of Social and Clinical Psychology.

Jenna V. Williams is an Assistant Psychologist in the Mineral Hospital’s Neuro-Rehabilitation Service in Bath, UK. She graduated from the University of Bristol in 2006 with a first-class honours degree in experimental psychology. Jenna joined the University of Sheffield in 2007 as a Research Assistant where she worked on projects focusing on the social relationships of adolescents and young adults with Asperger Syndrome (high-functioning autism); interdisciplinary team working in community rehabilitation settings; evaluating the use of telehealth in chronic obstructive pulmonary disease; and a European partnership implementing secondary school anti-bullying peer-support systems. Jenna has publications in the evolutionary psychology of relationships and the social psychology of bullying of adolescents with Asperger Syndrome.

Tara Young is Senior Research Fellow at the Centre for Social and Evaluation Research at London Metropolitan University. Tara obtained a first-class degree in sociology from the University of the West of England, Bristol, and a Master’s degree in criminology from the London School of Economics and Political Science. She is now working towards a PhD by publication. Tara has worked on a number of research projects focusing on group delinquency and gang membership. Her work on gangs in the UK (with Professor Simon Hallsworth) has influenced policy at local and national levels. She has co-authored several journal articles on street-based youth groups and Girls and Gangs – ‘Shemale’ Gangsters in the UK? Her current projects include understanding multiple perpetrator rape.
We would like to thank our publisher, Wiley-Blackwell, and particularly the project editor Karen Shield, for their support, patience and commitment to this book. We owe a large debt of gratitude to Annabel Lander and Melanie Turner for all their administrative support and hard work over the duration of this project. We would also like to thank the NSPCC, especially Lorraine Radford and Phillip Noyes, for their continuing support and funding for our work in this important area of child welfare. Last but not least, our chapter authors have been a rewarding group to work with and we thank them for their efforts and patience.
